Trade War Fears Escalate, Markets Falter

Trade tensions heightened early Monday morning following several developments, including a joint meeting of the European Union and China regarding the United States' plans with regard to global trade. The news is roiling markets, and investors are fleeing risky assets in favor of more secure, safe-haventype assets. All three major U.S. stock indexes are down.

Yields on U.S. Treasury notes dropped during Monday trading due to a Treasury plan to curb Chinese investment in U.S. technology firms, according to The Wall Street Journal. Yields move in the opposite direction of prices. The Treasury is said to be planning a restriction on firms that have at least 25% Chinese ownership from buying U.S. firms with "industrially significant technology." Another similar policy that plans to block technology exports to Beijing was also announced. While plans have not yet been finalized, the initiative is an effort to protect the United States' most important and valuable technology and innovations from China. Intellectual property theft is one of the main reasons for the tariffs and trade disputes between the United States and China in 2018. U.S. companies will have a chance to weigh in on the protectionist policies before they go into effect.

Why are investors reacting so strongly? Because the new policies come on top of the already imposed tariffs on $50 billion worth of Chinese imports and threats to impose tariffs on an addition $400 billion worth of Chinese imports. The likelihood of a full-scale trade war is rising. Chinese retaliatory measures have also been in the same range as the initial tariffs. While some do benefit from protectionist policies, a full-scale trade war could threaten economic growth and thrust the world into a recession.

Tactical Fixed Income lost 0.2% last week. The best performer was the strategy's high-yield municipal-bond holding, up 0.16%. The worst performer of the group was the strategy's convertible bond holding, which was down 0.97%.
