Britain Faces Brexit Drama

The British pound went for a ride on Monday morning after two prominent U.K. government officials' departed Sunday night. Brexit Secretary David Davis announced Sunday night he would be resigning, a move that was long anticipated following Davis' vehement disapproval of the newly drafted Brexit deal and repeated threats to leave over the last few months. Before Davis' departure, Prime Minister Theresa May appeared to have united legislators over a Brexit plan that included a free-trade zone with the European Union and a new U.K. dominance over many rules and regulations surrounding the new trade arena. Now analysts appear concerned about the agreement.

Boris Johnson, the U.K.'s Foreign Secretary, followed suit shortly after Davis, sparking concern over May's ability to keep her cabinet in place. If more top officials resign, May could lose her already weak grip on the U.K.'s parliament and face a serious challenge to her power. The soft-exit Brexit deal that May negotiated could still remain, as Johnson was a pro-Brexit proponent. He was, however, apparently dissatisfied with the deal's proposed not-so-clean break.

With less than nine months now until the U.K. is scheduled to leave the European Union, something has to be formalized. What happens following these departures could set the stage for Brexit, the U.K., and Prime Minister May's fate going forward.

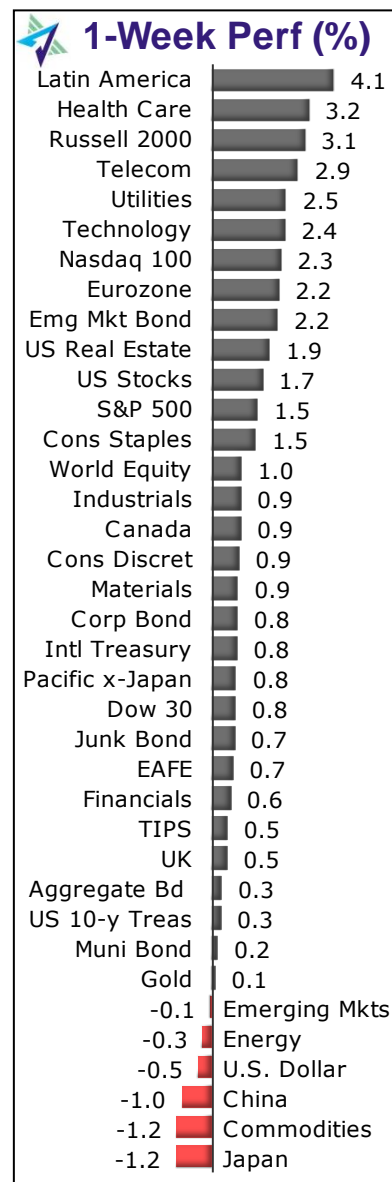

Tactical Fixed Income gained 0.6% last week. The strategy's convertible securities and preferred security positions were the best performers, up 1.64% and 1.30%, respectively. All positions in the strategy were positive for the week.

Global Multi-Asset gained 1.3% for the week. The best performer of the group was the strategy's real estate position, up 1.93% for the week. All positions in the strategy were up last week.

Factor Rotation was up 2.6% last week. The best-performing holdings in the strategy were the alternative alpha and Russell 2000 ETFs, up 3.19% and 3.11%, respectively. The worst performer of the group was the DWA momentum ETF, up 1.50%.

Sector Rotation gained 2.1% for the week. All holdings were positive, with notable gains in retail and health care. The lowest-returning allocation of the week was the strategy's oil and gas exploration and production holding, up 0.31%.

International Rotation was down 0.3% last week. The strategy used 20% of its cash holdings to purchase shares in the iShares MSCI Mexico ETF (EWW). EWW is now the strategy's sole holding.
